Philosophy for Communities with the U3A

We're offering three free sessions to give an experience of a philosophical enquiry using Philosophy for Communities (P4C). P4C is a way of having a stimulating and respectful discussion about a big question. These sessions will be informal, interactive and social – with tea and biscuits provided.

Each session will have a different theme. Starting with a stimulus the group will be led through a structured but flexible process to find the question they want to discuss together.

- Tuesday 5th October: Food and community
- Tuesday 12th October: Friendship and community
- Tuesday 19th October; Family and community

2pm – 3.30pm at Scotia Works, Leadmill Road, Sheffield S1 4SE.

P4C gets you thinking creatively, critically, collaboratively and with care; thinking and talking together to delve into ideas more deeply. Everyone can philosophise – come ready to find more questions than you do answers!

"I love, love, love the respectful conversations and the insights, and challenges that arise."

Previous participant (Sheffield Year of Reading)

There will be space for up to 8 people to join each session to allow for social distancing. You are welcome to come to more than one session, but we will try to make sure that as many people as possible have the chance to join in.

Facilitators Rosie Carnall and Kate Halliwell bring years of experience in P4C and love getting people thinking, talking, listening and having fun.

These sessions are offered free to Sheffield U3A as part of a community project with the Development Education Centre South Yorkshire.
